Two Wrongs Still Don't Make A Right

I have said/done a lot of things in my life that I ought not have said/done. Here is the interesting thing about the majority of those moments, I usually had a "reason." I usually felt justified in the moment because of what someone said to evoke the comment or action. If you knew what they said to me or if you knew what they did to me, you would understand why I said/did the thing that I did. I think this is the common human experience. Our society is filled with examples of people saying/doing horrible things but justifying them based on what was said/done to them. Jesus calls us to a better way of life together.

"But I say to you, do not resist him who is evil; but whoever slaps you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." (Matt. 5:39) Christians should read those words over and over, but especially when someone does us wrong. Jesus did not only preach lofty ideas, but he lived them out and left us an example to follow. 1 Peter is all about what Christians ought to do when suffering in spite of or because of their righteousness. The great example is Jesus on the cross. "And while being reviled, He did not revile in return; while suffering, He uttered no threats, but kept entrusting Himself to Him who judges righteously." (1 Peter 2:23) They beat Him. They shamed Him. They spit on Him. They lied about Him. They crucified Him, and He still died for them. That is our example

People are always going to say/do things to/about us that they ought not say. The question we must answer is whether we will live by our flesh or demonstrate the Spirit of God. That challenge to our lives is probably coming faster than we know. "Do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good." (Rom. 12:21)
